TALKS WITH TEACHERS

by the Rev. Victor Hoag, D.D.

Your Permanent Influence

At this time of the year we Church school teachers may have put aside our books, and we may cease for a while our continual scheming of how to start and carry through next Sunday's lesson. But we still have memories of the children we have been teaching all through the year. Well may we ask ourselves between terms, "What have I accomplished in the lives of these children? Will the things that were said and done in my class have any permanent influence on the lives of these boys and girls?"

There is a fascinating scientific conjecture that vibrations never cease, but are passed on through other carrying media through incalculable time and space. The candle that burns its life away is in reality causing its material to pass into other forms. In human relations, lives give impulses to other lives, and these to others, like the advancing waves of the ocean. Who can tell what this moment's willed action may have started!

We have few ways of discovering the remote effects of any particular push. Now and then we see a result, long after, and know its origin. If only we could recall and examine the initial impulses, and estimate their value! Yet we do have a modern way: We have phonographic and tape recording of sound, and we have movies. If these catch a given performance we can play them over later for our pleasure and study.

This came forcibly to my mind recently when, cleaning up my tape recorder and playing over some old tapes, I found I was listening to the recording of a class in a small Church school which I had long forgotten, the recording of which had supposedly been erased. The teacher I remembered well — a young businessman of about 30 who had shown himself peculiarly sensitive to the human relationships called for in the newer ways of teaching. In that parish, I remember, when several older teachers had resisted our efforts to introduce the new series of lessons, he at once saw the needs of children, and readily caught on to the new aims and approach.

The tape had been made nearly 10 years ago, yet the words came as clearly as when we first played it back the same afternoon — Henry, and the rector, and I. We had been seated in the rector's study, and we took notes, then compared reactions. We had all agreed that it was a good session, and that Henry's fifth grade boys had been moved to original response. Some words I heard again were:

(There had been some vandalism in the local school recently, and this became the background for the discussion, which ultimately led by stages through respect for the property of others to respect for authority, and then to some thought of God's authority and of reverence for Him.)

Teacher: "Why do you think these boys tore up the things in that schoolroom?"

Voices: "They wanted some fun." "They hated school." "It was their chance — nobody was guarding it." "They wanted to see what they could do." "They were just little kids, the police said — they didn't have any sense." Some of these were developed, and the group mind clearly showed disapproval. (The group process, without undue adult pressure was applying standards.)

Teacher: "Would we all behave better if there was a policeman on every corner?"

Voices: "There couldn't be enough" and finally the idea that "the best policeman is yourself."

It was interesting to recall how these boys responded to their teacher's gentle leadership. There was clowning and some laughter, but the trend was earnest and eager. Finally the teacher led them to the idea of God as the great authority behind everything.

Teacher: "When you pray, do you always ask God to approve of everything you have done?" And then, "In your prayers, just how do you think about God?"

There were some odd but penetrating expressions. "He's big . . . and strong." "He is just over the roof . . . but everywhere, too." "He looks at me, and says to go ahead." "I think of the Ten Commandments." "He's nice . . . and I like Him."

All through, Henry was giving them his own sincere religion, but leading them through their own boyish impressions. He was influencing them in ways we can only imagine. Henry is no longer living, but the touch on these young lives has been going on ever since. These boys (then 11) will be voting for the first time this fall. Will Henry be voting through them?

So, all our teaching efforts pass into personal histories. The moments we have spent in class are not wasted — unless, perhaps, they were ill-prepared, vain, and unloving. How do we influence the lives of our pupils? God only knows! But He does know, and now and then He may allow us to see the fruits of our teaching.

LETTERS

LIVING CHURCH readers communicate with each other using their own names, not initials or pseudonyms. They are also asked to give address and title or occupation and to limit their letters to 300 words. (Most letters are abridged by the editors.)

Southwestern Virginia

When I originally subscribed to THE LIVING CHURCH, I rather suspected your editorials and news items would be of a liberal bent. A peek at an occasional issue together with your Milwaukee domiciliary was the basis of my opinion. Hence, no illusions have been broken in my weekly observance on the way your many statements were couched in sociological travesty.

I was disappointed in the misconceptions created in your June 12th issue with reference to the diocese of Southwestern Virginia, both by the news item and editorial. If you had access to the Episcopal Churchwomen's vote favoring integration of young people's conferences, this same source certainly was knowledgeable of a motion made in the diocesan convention for the matter of integrated or segregated youth conferences to be submitted to the communicants of the diocese in a referendum; this referendum to be binding upon the diocesan convention. It carried in the lay order by approximately three-to-one majority, but was unanimously defeated by the clergy. Does this not negate your insidious inference that the lay majority of the council or convention is impeding the desire of the women and young people? If not, why then the clergy's refusal to let the people of the diocese decide this vexing problem? Obviously the majority of the lay delegates was so willing.

Moreover, prior to this year's convention, you know that a survey of lay opinion made impartially by the diocesan study commission established by the 1958 council revealed that of those responding 74% were opposed to any type integrated youth conference; furthermore, that 81% were opposed to youth conferences integrated racially by sex. This latter proposal was the main forte of the clergy and lay minority in the councils of 1958, 1959, and 1960. Significantly, every communicant of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia had an opportunity to execute the survey questionnaire — young people and women, as well as male communicants. Does not this overwhelming sentiment render rather meaningless and trite the following quotation of your editorial: "It seems very significant that the two groups whom segregationists

FRANCIS T. WEST

Martinsville, Va.

Editor's Note: The following excerpt from the account of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia's annual council, published in the Southwestern Episcopalian, confirms what was reported in our editorial, "Clergy Are Not Alone," to which Mr. West refers: "Question before the house was the disposition of youth conferences at the Bishop Phillips Memorial Conference Center. Both the young people of the diocese and the women of the diocese had voted to integrate the youth conferences. The clergy were of the same opinion.

"A sizeable majority of the laymen at council, however, opposed such integration and a series of resolutions were proposed of before it was voted to continue the operating of the diocesan conference center as in 1959."

Devotional Reading

I am moved to express my agreement with Fr. Boylan's criticism [L.C., June 12th] of Christine Heffner's article on devotional reading [L.C., May 15th].

Being familiar with a large number of the books mentioned by Christine Heffner, I know well how gradually the spiritual classics should be approached. Many current religious books are based on these classics and, in this comparatively simplified form, furnish probably the best course to pursue toward the classics themselves. Perhaps St. Paul's words on the necessity of milk preceding meat are relevant here. Certainly the early reading of St. Theresa may well prove insipid (to use Fr. Boylan's word) or even repellent.

In some 60 years of hearing sermons, I have never noted the mention — much less the recommendation — of a single book that was not on the subject of "applied Christianity." We need gentle and progressive guidance in the realm of devotional reading.

Juxtaposition?

I have indited a letter to the secular magazine Time for its crude reporting of the Jesuit effort to canonize certain martyrs of the Reformation period in which "Anglicans" and "Catholics" were placed in juxtaposition. Of course nothing was said of Bloody Mary.

But I was astounded to read the obviously unedited dispatch from RNS in THE LIVING CHURCH in the same vein, "Contributions from Anglicans to the Catholic shrine. . . ." [L.C., June 5th].

One thing I place to my credit when I was religion editor on two Chicago newspapers: I always wrote "Roman Catholic" and I have noticed since then more such exact references to the Church of Rome in the local public press.

LOS ANGELES

Closely Guarded Secret

The July 4th issue of Newsweek reported a recurrence of the pentecostal "speaking in tongues" in 1,455-communicant St. Mark's Church, Van Nuys, Calif.

The phenomenon began last October when the Rev. Dennis J. Bennett, rector of St. Mark's, became impressed with the speaking in tongues done in a church in Los Angeles, and after study and conference with people who did it found he could do it himself.

Fr. Bennett shared his experience with his three assistants and various members of the parish, and the pentecostal speaking spread. In April, the treasurer asked the rector for his resignation. Bishop Bloy of Los Angeles sent a temporary minister and a firm letter to the parish forbidding any further such talking which would seem to be under Church auspices.

At present, Fr. Bennett has left St. Mark's for a mission in Seattle, still convinced of the "spiritual validity of the experience."

Fr. Bennett told THE LIVING CHURCH: "Since the Episcopal Church . . . has been praying for renewal of the gift of healing and miracles, it is not unusual that the other nine-fold gifts of the Spirit of the New Testament Church should begin to reappear. Our experience with the 'unknown language' has exactly followed St. Paul's description and explanation in I Corinthians 14. There has been no emotionalism, no sensationalism of any kind, just a quiet deepening of the spiritual life, a deeper love for our Lord and the Church, and an amazing increase in the power of healing and the other spiritual gifts* . . .

"The phenomenon of the 'unknown tongue' as a spiritual and devotional resource is known in many places in the

*Dr. Francis J. Hall writes in his Dogmatic Theology, v. 8, p. 24:

"The 'extraordinary gifts' pertain to the particular and supernatural providence whereby the emergencies of the apostolic age were met. They were of a miraculous nature and abnormal, becoming more and more rare as the Church became more fully developed. . . . That they have ceased altogether and forever we cannot maintain, for we can neither foresee what extraordinary emergencies the Church may have to meet, nor sufficiently explore the mind and will of the Holy Spirit in this matter. . . . They will always be exceptional."

Episcopal Church, but has been kept a closely guarded secret, sometimes for many years, because it seemed a bit wild! . . ."

[Reliable sources have named one of these parishes as Trinity Church, Wheaton, Ill. The Rev. R. E. Winkler, rector of Trinity Church, was in Europe at press time and therefore was unavailable for comment.]

Fr. Bennett said further:

"The chief objection voiced to me was that it was 'too religious,' and that it created a 'spiritual elite' who thought they were superior. This, by the way, is not true. Everyone who has received this experience is utterly convinced that it is for anyone who asks and has nothing to do with spiritual superiority. . . .

"May I please emphasize that no one has left the Church because of the experience. All involved have found themselves drawn to the Church and the Sacrament more strongly. . . . Those who left, left only because they found it impossible to keep their spiritual lives healthy in an atmosphere of rejection. They have gone to other parishes and missions, and have usually been received with cordiality."

INSTITUTIONS

In Good Hands

The board of directors of St. Francis Boys' Homes on June 28th accepted the resignation of the Rev. Robert Mize, founder of the homes, as director. His resignation becomes effective January 1, 1961. Fr. Mize has been on leave of absence in South Africa at the invitation of Archbishop de Blank of Capetown [L.C., September 13, 1959].

A spokesman of the board assured THE LIVING CHURCH that administration and staff of the homes will continue as in the past, and that the Rev. William Craig, assistant director, who has been acting director during the absence of Fr. Mize, will continue in the post.

Fr. Mize is considering an invitation of Archbishop de Blank to remain in South Africa, but his plans are not settled. In a letter to members and friends of the homes, Fr. Mize said:

"Through the years I have tried to develop the homes to the point where they are not dependent upon any single person. And I step out of the directorship because I have come to feel that the homes are fully organized and in safe and good hands. In one sense the job of a founder is to work himself out of a job. My temporary separation . . . has proven to me that the homes are sound and durable, and with a proven leader in the person of Fr. Craig. The last few months have brought better results in the rehabilitation of boys than ever before.

"In recent years, as the homes have developed and I have had to give myself to administrative duties, I have come to long for a renewal of the pastoral and priestly function of my ministry. . . .

"Not only in Fr. Craig but also in the two deans of boys, St. Francis has three splendid priests and leaders. I have come to look upon Fr. Peter Francis, who first came to the homes in 1948, as one of the reasons for St. Francis becoming known from coast to coast as a pioneer and standard-making agency. And not enough can be said for other . . . workers, many of whom have long been with the homes."

MEDICINE

Morally Wrong

The Rt. Rev. R. C. Mortimer, Bishop of Exeter, in a speech to the British Medical Association said that physicians are under no moral obligation to keep elderly persons alive by "extraordinary means" — those which "involve very great expense, inconvenience, or hardship."

"Ordinary means of prolonging life must be in all cases employed," he said,

Bishop Bentley: No stranger, he.

but to subject very old people to the acute discomfort of a serious operation or intravenous feeding "would seem to be morally wrong. Such means should be used only where there is reasonable hope of recovery or where some benefit or happiness is conferred on the patient."

ALASKA

They Cast Their Nets

On June 2d the clergy conference of the missionary district of Alaska convened at Harding Lake Camp, some 45 miles south of Fairbanks on the Alaska Highway. Some 30 missionary clergymen had traveled there by boats, airplanes, trains, and automobiles. They unrolled their sleeping bags, cast their mosquito nets on cots in tent frames, and settled down in a log dining hall for their annual meeting of minds.

The major speaker was no stranger to Alaska. After 12 years away, the former Bishop of Alaska, Bishop Bentley, director of the Overseas Department and a vice president of the National Council, was home to a changed and changing land.

Special guests of the conference were Mr. and Mrs. Albert Patterson of the diocese of Western New York, who had accompanied Bishop Gordon of Alaska back from Buffalo in the new airplane which was the gift of the people in that diocese to Alaska [L.C., June 5th].

ENGLAND

Inherited Manners

The Most Rev. Geoffrey Francis Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury, blamed not only the "abusive" attitude of Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev over the U2 incident but the "manners of the American reply" for the collapse of the Summit Conference in Paris.

Writing in the Canterbury Diocesan Notes, Dr. Fisher said "the more Mr. Khrushchev said, the more abusive, and, therefore, the more ineffective to any sensible person, he became. . . ." On the other hand, he wrote, "the manners of the American reply caused distress to many who are devoted friends of the United States."

Dr. Fisher said that although Mr. Khrushchev had "behaved unreasonably," there had been "a great opportunity for Western tradition to show how a great power can rise to inherited good manners.

"Would it not have set a new, a higher and more Christian standard," he asked "if the answer had been to say that we are sorry?" [RNS]

Not Necessarily Right

The Ven. Oswin Harvard Gibbs-Smith of London took issue with the Rev. Canon John Collins, precentor of St. Paul's Cathedral, who has frequently urged that Britain take the initiative in disarmament.

Preaching from the same pulpit in St.

Paul's, the archdeacon said it was unrealistic to say that if Britain gave the lead in disarming unilaterally, other nations would follow.

"Peace at any price is not a Christian objective," he said. "The Church has never adopted pacifism as the necessarily right attitude." He added that he would go further and express the judgment that "had it not been for the nuclear power of the peace-loving United States, Europe now might have been overrun by the overwhelming might of socialist armies."

CHICAGO

Witness on the West Side

Despite a drizzle and a chill wind off Lake Michigan, more than 300 clergy, acolytes, and young people from 15 urban churches participated in an outdoor procession during the second annual Day of Witness sponsored by the west side clergy of the diocese of Chicago late in May.

The procession, complete with Church flags, parish banners, American flags, drum majorettes, and uniformed members of St. Andrew's three baseball teams, wound through the streets of Chicago's near-west side for almost an hour. Aided by choirs from the Church of the Ascension, Chicago, and St. Luke's Church, Evanston, and accompanied by drum and bugle corps from St. Andrew's Church and a nearby high school, the procession sang "Onward Christian Soldiers" while people watched from second story porches and open windows.

Because of the weather, the Eucharist, celebrated in the presence of the Bishop of Chicago, was held in the Church of the Epiphany instead of in Skinner Park. After the service, a luncheon honored the Rev. John Plummer, retired rector of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Berwyn, on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of his ordination.

Procession in Chicago's west side: Church flags and three baseball teams.

Fanfare

More than 1,200 Churchmen of the diocese of Chicago crowded the Cathedral of St. James, Whitsunday, for the Choral Evensong which concluded the observance of the 125th anniversary of the diocese. The Presiding Bishop, making his first official visitation to the diocese, was the preacher.

A fanfare announced the arrival of each of three processions to the cathedral. The first procession, composed of clergy, the cathedral choir, and the lay trustees and lay members of the standing committee, entered by the west door. The bishops' procession, which included the visiting bishops, the bishops suffragan of Chicago, and Bishop Burrill, the diocesan, entered by the south door, and the Presiding Bishop and his attendants entered by the north door.

At the conclusion of the service eight clergy of the diocese were honored for "long and distinguished service to the Church."

TRAVEL

The Church in the Mountains

Travelers to the national parks and national forests of Colorado will find the Church accessible to them at most points. Within Rocky Mountain National Park, at the town of Estes Park is St. Bartholomew's Chapel; just outside the park boundaries at Allenspark is the Church of St. James on the Mount, with services at 8:00 and 11:00 on Sunday mornings.

Near the cliff dwellings of Mesa Verde National Park are St. John's Church, Ouray, and St. Paul's Church, at Mancos. The Church of St. John the Baptist, at nearby Granby, serves travelers to the Shadow Mountain Recreation Area.

Fairly near Dinosaur National Monument in the northwest corner of Colorado are St. Paul's Church, at Steamboat Springs, and St. Mark's Church, at Craig. St. Matthew's Church, Grand Junction, is near Grand Mesa National Monument; St. Luke's Church, Delta, St. Paul's Church, Montrose, and the Church of the Good Samaritan, Gunnison, are near the Black Canyon National Monument.

Serving other resort areas are St. James' Church, Meeker, in the White River National Forest; St. Barnabas' Church, Glenwood Springs, and St. John's Church, New Castle, for the White River National Forest and Glenwood Springs; Christ Church, at Aspen; St. George's Church, Leadville, Grace Church, Buena Vista, and the Church of the Ascension, Salida, for historic mining areas and the San Isabela National Forest; St. Paul's Church, Central City, Grace Church, Georgetown, and Calvary Church, Idaho Springs; and St. John's Church, Ouray, St. Mark's Church, Durango, amid old mining areas and near the historic narrow gauge railroad, still operating.

The preacher entered by the north door.*

Sunday in the Sierras

Visitors to King's Canyon National Park and Sequoia National Park in the diocese of San Joaquin in California will find the Church at Camp San Joaquin, Generals Highway, Sequoia National Forest, where there are weekly services. Vacationers at Yosemite National Park will find some services in Yosemite Village. Others will be held in the three camping areas, but the schedule was incomplete at last report.

Bishop for Vacationers

Bishop Sterling of Montana makes personal visitations to Glacier and Yellowstone National Parks alternately throughout July and August. Schedules of these and of services at nearby towns are posted in all lodges and dining rooms in both parks.

SOCIAL RELATIONS

Final Action

Final action was taken by Episcopal Service for Youth, meeting in Atlantic City on June 10th, endorsing a plan under which the agency is now officially related to the Division of Health and Welfare Services of the National Council. The plan was embodied in recommendations presented and approved at the April meeting of the National Council [L.C., May 8th].

Under the realignment the Division of Health and Welfare Services will include a new Committee on Children and Youth. This committee will be served by an associate secretary, to be appointed by the Presiding Bishop, whose responsibilities will include the provision of staff service to the board and member agencies of E.S.Y.

The close relationship of E.S.Y. to the

EUROPE

First Fund

The convocation of American Churches in Europe met recently in Munich and established, for the first time, a convocation treasury, to be made up of contributions from all the American churches in Europe, and to be divided equally between the needs in the European field and the program and budget of the National Council. Mr. Karl Cate of Paris was elected first treasurer of the convocation fund.

ELECTIONS. Council of advice: reelected, the Very Rev. Sturgis Riddle and the Rev. Donald Wiseman; laity, elected, Mr. Gordon Morrill and Mr. Wendell Nichols. Deputies to General Convention: the Rev. Gerald O'Grady and Mr. Karl Cate. Alternates to General Convention; the Rev. Joseph Bernardin and Mr. George Snyder.

SOUTH AFRICA

Quarrel with Doctrines

The Most Rev. Joost de Blank, Archbishop of Capetown, has denounced a recent attack on him by a publication of the Dutch Reformed Church.

The Reformed Church periodical, Kerkbode, described Dr. de Blank as "very arrogant" and "painfully color-conscious."

Replying in Good Hope, organ of the Capetown archdiocese, Dr. de Blank said that "at a time when it looked as if it might have been possible to arrange conversations between the Churches in South Africa (on the racial issue), Kerkbode decided to launch yet another attack on me.

"On such occasions as I have taken issue with the Dutch Reformed Church," he said, "I have never descended to personal abuse. . . . My quarrel has been with erroneous doctrines and practices, not with people." [R.N.S.]

INDIANAPOLIS

Pledged: Continued Support

Meeting at Christ Church Cathedral, in Indianapolis, Ind., in May, the convention of the diocese of Indianapolis adopted a budget of $348,038. Anticipating the expiration of a foundation grant which has made possible notable mission advances, the convention authorized the appointment of a special committee to study the further capital needs of the diocese and to prepare a proposal for meeting these needs to be presented to the 1961 convention.

20 Centuries of

CATHEDRALS

1st Century

When Paul wrote to the Church in Thessalonica, for instance, he was writing to all the Christians in town . . . and they all met in a house which was barely large enough to get everyone in.

Soon there were just too many Christians in town to get them all into a single house. So several families offered their houses.

There was still just one chief minister in town (some called him "Bishop") and he had a hard time of it . . . he was wanted in all three places at once. (It still happens.)

IVth Century

The problem became really aggravating when the Emperor became a Christian. Now it was respectable to be a Christian. And now there could be church buildings . . . in fact, church buildings were springing up all over town. And the bishop had to hold them together as the Church in Thessalonica — that's what he was for.

With all these church buildings springing up, and with the bishop rushing around to them all as best he could, it became apparent that . . .

. . . if anyone was going to see very much of him, and if the Christians were ever to get a sense of being just one Church, then they needed a mighty big church building for the bishop to sit in and for all the people who wanted to get together with him. So we got cathedrals.

And the cathedrals got bigger and better. They got so big the bishop had to holler, and he walked around the cathedral so everybody could see what he really looked like.

Which brings us up to the XVIth century because things stayed pretty bad for a long time. Things even got worse before they got better. For instance, the bishop got so he didn't even care if the people could hear him. (He talked in Latin anyway.) Then — Luther nailed his theses on the church door and the Reformation opened.

Christians met in homes once again, and they got to know their spiritual leaders, for a change. And they got to know each other.

And then each separate group grew and grew and grew. It got so ministers had to start doing a lot of hollering again, especially at camp meetings, and the bishop rode horseback all around so everyone could see what he looked like.

Which takes care of the XVIIIth and XIXth centuries. Except we started building our own new cathedrals so we could do our own hollering indoors. (It was more comfortable.) But everyone was out of touch. We were as out of touch as we had ever been.

But, still we keep on building cathedrals for the bishop to sit in. (He doesn't have to holler quite so much though, because he has a microphone.)

In the meanwhile, someone invented a little box with a window in it.

These boxes are found in homes. The Joneses have one and the Smythes have one and the Browns have two. Almost every home has at least one of these boxes.

Forty-four million homes have these boxes. (That's a lot of homes, when you stop to think about it.) These boxes are called television sets.

And if the bishop talks over the television channel, everyone in his home can see him and he doesn't have to holler, and he can begin to talk real sense and you get so you know him pretty well.

So when you go to church or to the market and you start talking with someone, what is more natural than to talk about what the bishop said? And even if you never met the other person before, at least you've got a starting point, because the other person saw the bishop, too.

So, instead of building a usual cathedral where the bishop still has to walk around, in order to be seen, and where you have to hear him from a loud speaker anyway — and he still looks vague up there, like he was talking into space — one bright diocese is going to build a cathedral that looks like this.

And the bishop is going to be able to talk with every parish and he will be able to talk with every family and every single person is going to know his bishop.

Every single parish and every single person is going to be linked together as a diocese in a way we haven't known since the start.

Parable For July

Through the miracles of technology it has become a thing for the average American to drive to remote places of great beauty and great interest. The vacation planned to cover great distances and take in a large number of preselected "sights" is a commonplace.

It is possible, for example, to drive to the Black Hills and park near the observation platform which faces Mt. Rushmore. On a summer day, the observant bystander will see many people come to the platform, stare at the carven faces of the presidents, snap a picture or two, buy a postcard, drink a soft drink, and be off down the road after a pause of 10 minutes.

It is possible to "do" Yellowstone or Glacier or Yosemite in a day or less, and to make a tour of all three in a week.

Similarly, it is possible for a person to confine his religious "tour" to a single hour out of the week.

The hasty tourist and the one-hour-a-week Christian share similar opportunities and a similar waste of those opportunities.

Each, at some effort, brings himself to the edge of what is sublimely true, good, and beautiful. Each samples what is lastingly significant. Each, unless he is singularly insensitive, knows something of the exaltation of spirit which is the reasonable human response to what he has encountered.

By comparison with the soul trapped in the darkness of bar or counting house, brothel or snob-set club, the tourist and the one-hour worshipper each has great opportunities.

It is a great tragedy of our times that these opportunities are so commonly thrown away.

If the tourist would leave his car and spend half a day wandering down a trail, he might find an unpublicized waterfall or cliff or trout stream, might see a sunset or share a pot of campfire coffee, might meet some one worth exchanging quiet words with, might even, in quiet and beauty, meet himself.

He will not do so if he dashes from sight to sight, his eye on his wrist watch and his mind racing with close calculations on space and time.

And the Sunday worshipper also cheats himself if, once the acolyte has doused the last candle or the rector has shaken his hand on the church steps, he forgets that he lives his whole week in the presence of the glory and majesty of God.

The observation platform which is the public Sunday worship of the Church is a grand place to come to time and time again. From this vantage point we can see and hear the truth. But if we see and hear with our hearts and souls, the Sunday service will serve to call us down the less well-marked trails of religious life — to the meetings with God in private prayer, to the exploration of His word in class and study, to the alarming cliffs of penitence, and to the trout streams of personal evangelism.

God give us grace that we may not leave His House in haste!

Welcome, Colleague

The Anglican Communion has a new magazine, and it is a distinguished entrant into the field of Church journalism.

The first issue of Anglican World is a large (68 pages, 9½" by 12½"), handsome magazine, profusely illustrated (often in full color), with articles covering a very wide range of Anglican subjects and written by a distinguished group of contributors.

The magazine is scheduled to be published bi-monthly, and subscriptions for the six issues in a single year are only $3.00 (slightly less in groups of 10). We unhesitatingly call it a good buy, if it can maintain its first-issue quality.

Anglican World is the latest venture of a group of British Church journalists who already have one great success to their credit — Church Illustrated, a skillfully edited picture monthly serving the Church of England. Leading this team are Peter Harvey, who was a welcome visitor to the United States during the 1958 General Convention, and Dewi Morgan, THE LIVING CHURCH's England correspondent.

The new magazine represents this group's third effort to break into the American Church reading market. Episcopal Church Illustrated was tested after General Convention, carrying reprints of some of the English magazine's features, along with some American material. After this was abandoned, an international edition of Church Illustrated, keeping the format of the original, was produced for a few months.

Anglican World represents a wiser and more hopeful move. It is an entirely new magazine, more handsomely printed and more lavishly displayed than Church Illustrated. If we think of Church Illustrated as the Church's Look, Anglican World is the Church's Holiday.

Since the new magazine is world-wide in interest, its articles cover a wide geographical range. The first issue carries one article on the United States, a thoughtful essay by Bishop Brown of Arkansas on the southern racial controversy. There are other articles that cover the Anglican scene from Canada to Australia, from South Africa to India.

We welcome this newcomer to our field of joyous labor. We wish it well and expect it to play a valuable role in uniting the Anglican Communion.

sorts and conditions

BIRTH and marriage and death, the three climactic moments of the individual human life, are moments when almost everybody appreciates the significance of religion. It is said that there are some people who only go to church three times in their lives, and that they are carried in two of the three. Be that as it may, the relevance of Christianity at these moments is envied by atheistic philosophies and systems, like Communism, whose emptiness is shown up when they try to devise appropriate ceremonies for such occasions.

IT SEEMS, however, that Christianity did not originally pay much attention to any of the three. Most of the talk about marriage in the New Testament regards it as something a little to one side of the main track of seeking the Kingdom of Heaven. As far as death is concerned, it was thought that a great proportion of the present generation would still be alive when the Day of Judgment came. And while birth was a vital and central theme of the Gospel, the reference was not to the birth of babies but to the rebirth of young and old alike into a new life under a new covenant with God.

THUS, the powerful relevance of Christianity to the lives of ordinary people is really a sort of by-product, an incidental effect of the Gospel. Perhaps that is precisely the reason for the relevance. Birth is all very well, but only a confident faith in the eternal destiny of the person being born provides a solid foundation for rejoicing over the beginning of life for little Mike or Judy. Marriage is an "honorable estate," but it is a sacrament only when it has a meaning beyond the earthly lives of the young couple. Death is merely a question mark unless the question is answered in Christ.

EARNEST Christian thinkers today demand that Christianity be relevant to the daily lives of ordinary people. But it really is relevant only when it insists that the daily lives of ordinary people be relevant to the Gospel. Nothing about mankind, about civilization, about war and peace, about economics, really has a built-in relevance.

I WAS reminded of this the other day, listening in church to the excuses given by the people who were invited to the great supper. One had bought some land, one had bought a yoke of oxen, another had just got married. But the master of the house, instead of making his supper relevant to the concerns of his friends, sent his servant out to get the people who were poor and downtrodden and had nothing else to do but come to his supper.

THE FOUNDATION of Christianity's relevance, it seems, is its imperious demand that we drop everything and accept Christ's invitation to His feast. PETER DAY

Close Ties

The Rev. Douglas W. Kennedy, rector of St. James' Church, West Hartford, Conn., has been appointed canon of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen, Scotland.

Close ties have existed between Aberdeen and Connecticut Anglicans since the Rt. Rev. Samuel Seabury was consecrated in Aberdeen 175 years ago. And for some time each has had a canon from the ranks of the other's clergy on its cathedral staff.

Mr. Kennedy, a native of Canada, recently celebrated the 25th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood.

BOOKS

Dawn Comes Up

A TESTAMENT OF TURNING. By Donet Meynell Roelofs. Morehouse-Barlow. Pp. 221. $3.25.

When the Anglican Writers Award was first announced, through the Episcopal Book Club and Morehouse-Barlow Co., probably no one guessed that the winning manuscript would turn out to be a series of letters begun, as it seems, with no thought whatsoever of publication. After all, letters are not the most likely material for a published work, a few notable exceptions (like the Pauline epistles) to the contrary.

Yet this is just what happened. A Testament of Turning, which won the $1,000 award, is made up of letters written over the past five years by Donet Meynell Roelofs to various persons of her acquaintance. One of the letters is to Bishop Lewis, then of Nevada, now of Olympia, who contributes the Foreword to the volume. The letters — 12 of them in all — are somewhat longer than most letters, for they form the chapters of a 221-page book.

The chapters, or letters (the epistolary style is preserved in the greeting of each), deal with Mrs. Roelofs' growth from agnosticism to a strong and steady faith nourished by the sacramental life of the Episcopal Church. This growth was for Mrs. Roelofs neither easy at the outset nor without its setbacks, whether apparent or real, along the way.

Shortly before coming into the Church, she tells us, she underwent psychotherapy — because, as a faculty wife at Emory University, she got it free of charge. (Her husband, Robert Roelofs, is now chairman of the department of philosophy at the University of Nevada.) Her "incapacity to love fully had been removed during therapy" (p. 67) and her love was thus free at last to move toward God. She came to love God before believing in Him; but gradually there came the intellectual conviction also, although never lost sight of throughout the book is the fact that intellectual considerations, important as they are, can take us only to the threshold of faith.

All of this is beautifully written, with an effortless flow of language rising at times to poetic heights. With a master's degree in philosophy and experience in radio script and journalistic writing, Mrs. Roelofs is able to put together a moving and convincing account of an experience shared by many a convert, but denied to those cradled in the faith. Despite the pain involved in her spiritual growth, the periods of dryness in devotion, not to mention the tragic death of her mother, Mrs. Roelofs believes it has all been abundantly worthwhile — and would be so even if she did not believe in a life to come:

"I came, I saw, I was conquered — by that Love. My name was Legion; I was in darkness and doubt and was given a name, and a purpose, and a self. I was at the meridian of my life; I cast no shadow, and was given substance. I stood alone and apart, and was given a Family. I was guilty, and was freely pardoned. I stood in peril, and was delivered. I was burdened with the ghosts of old sorrows, and was given joy to have and to hold.

"Until we find God, it is night. But dawn comes up in every face, and as soon as the eyes have sight" (pp. 212-213).

A Testament of Turning will not be a popular book, in the sense that every Churchperson ought to read it. Frankly, it is somewhat on the intellectual side, and will make its appeal mostly to college personnel, whether students or faculty members, who are perplexed with the same kind of doubts as was the author. But to such individuals it can definitely be recommended — and this is saying a lot.

Seminaries close for the summer, BUT—the preparation of those who are called to the Sacred Ministry does not cease on that account.

A thousand, and more, young men go out during these summer months to gain practical experience in pursuits related to their future responsibilities. Clinical Training in hospitals, missionary work at home and overseas, service in camps and institutions the country over, are all regarded as part of their theological education.

To their "book learning" are thus added the test and practice of Christian truth in life.
